

Tuning into Hope: Podcast Host Broadcasts Support for Those in Recovery

Brett Morris of Recovery Survey and his father share their remarkable story

Monday, May 9 | 7 p.m. EST | Virtual Forum | Zoom Webinar

One determined man, his supportive father and their remarkable story of recovery from substance use disorder (SUD) — that’s the focus of our May Family Forum featuring Brett Morris, founder and host of the popular Recovery Survey podcast, and his dad, retired Texas state trooper Sergeant Barry Morris.

Every week, more than 1,000 people from across the country tune into Recovery Survey, where Brett talks with a variety of guests who have overcome addictions and mental health issues. For our forum, Brett will share his personal account and mission to help others find strength in recovery. In addition, Sergeant Morris will join him to discuss how his son’s SUD affected his life and his former career as a law enforcement officer.

Meet Brett:

As an adolescent, Brett Morris struggled to find his place in the world and never really felt like he belonged. His solution was drugs and alcohol. That quickly turned into an addiction that completely took over his life. After detoxing in county jail, he realized that he wanted more out of life than getting high. In December, he celebrated seven years of being drug and alcohol free. He launched the Recovery Survey podcast in February 2020 and, in September 2021, started a Facebook Live stream on Thursday nights called Recovery Revolution Live. “My goal is to spread the message that recovery is possible,” he says. “If I can do it, so can you!”
